In space

Nicole Stott was born in 1962 in Albany, USA. Nicole worked for NASA from 1988 to 2015. As an astronaut, Nicole went into space twice. The first time was August 28th to November 29th, 2009, and she stayed in the international space station (ISS). While she was there, she went on a spacewalk for 6 hours 39 minutes. She also did many tests and helped to look after the ISS.

Nicole's second space flight was from February 24th to March 8th, 2011, and Nicole helped to complete the American part of the space station using a big robot arm! In total, Nicole spent 104 days in space. Nicole wasn't the first woman in space, but her work was important. Later, other women astronauts like Jessica Mier and Christina Koch went into space, too. Jessica and Christina did the first all-woman spacewalk in 2019!

When Nicole was in space, she painted pictures as a way to relax and now she's an artist. She creates jewelry and art that shows her experiences in space. Nicole also gives talks to groups. She talks about how important it is for young people to study subjects like science and math and why we should explore space.
