A Katy Brown

Quite honestly, our recent decision to move out of the city was probably the best one my husband and I have ever made. It wasn't an easy decision by any means as moving to a village was like stepping into the unknown. And it's true that once the decision had been made and the sales on both the properties were going through, the doubts began to set in. Would it be too quiet? Would we miss the constant noise of the traffic and the crowds of people? Unsurprisingly, we didn't! It was a wonderful change to sleep right through the night. Getting around in the countryside is not without its problems, but paying extra for petrol to get to work is certainly worth it. The view we have over fields and trees and the clean, fresh air all around us are a whole world away from the noise, stress and pollution that a life in the city brings.

B Janet Saunders

Last year I was living in student accommodation at the university, but a month ago I moved out to share a flat in town with three of my fellow students. I have to say that I wish I'd done it sooner! Obviously, there are some downsides to looking after a house. My housemates aren't that tidy and I seem to be the one who clears up after everyone, which is a pain. Also, we have to do our own cooking. When I lived in student accommodation, my room was cleaned for me and I ate all my meals in the cafeteria! But there are so many good things about sharing. We all get on very well. We take turns to cook, and if I get stuck doing an assignment, there's always someone to help. One of my housemates has a car and can give us lifts into university; otherwise there's a bus stop just a few houses away. Also, we can have parties and we invite the neighbours so no one can complain about the noise!

C Penny Barker

Most people can't wait to leave home and get their own place to become independent. I did just that when I started my first job at the age of 24 after university. However, I recently asked my parents if I could move back in! It wasn't because I didn't have enough money or didn't like doing the housework and cooking. I actually enjoyed those aspects of having my own flat. The truth is that I missed my family. It was just too quiet. I'm much happier now that I'm back. I learnt a lot from the experience and my mother appreciates the help I can give her in the house. My brothers are pleased that I'm home too as they like to borrow my car from time to time! That's fine with me as long as they pay for the petrol!

D Ruth Markham

We'd put off the decision for a long time but in the end, we had to move. My husband and I loved the big old family house where we'd brought up three children but it was really far too big for us. It was also getting very difficult and expensive to maintain. The move to a smaller, more modern house was a relief and nowhere near as stressful or emotional as we had imagined. We now live near the town centre so it's easy to walk to the shops. We still live quite close to two of our children and their families and see them a lot. So, really, we have no regrets at all. My husband certainly doesn't miss cutting the grass in that huge garden!
